

Bio

Jeffrey Killman is an assistant professor of Spanish translation at the University of North Carolina at Charlotte, where he teaches a range of topics including translation practice, translation technologies, and translation theory. He has also taught translation practice courses at the American University and the University of Texas at Brownsville. Killman holds a Ph.D., M.A., and D.E.A. in Translation and Interpreting from the University of Málaga, Spain and a B.A. in education with a major in Spanish and a minor in bilingual education from the University of New Mexico. He also holds a legal translation and interpreting certificate from the University of Castilla-La Mancha, Spain. Killman's research centers mostly on legal translation and translation technologies, and his publications have appeared in various edited volumes (e.g., Palgrave, Comares) and journals such as Translation and Interpreting Studies and Babel. He is a member of the scientific committee of EntreCulturas and the advisory board of Professional Communication and Translation Studies (PCTS) and has previously served as an at-large board member of the American Translation and Interpreting Studies Association (ATISA).

Statement

After having served as an at-large board member of ATISA, I am honored to be nominated to run for Vice-President of the Executive Committee of ATISA. Over the years, I have remained dedicated to ATISA because, through its venues, I have consistently encountered very high levels of scholarship, collegiality, and advocacy for the profession, from which I remain convinced that my professional standing and development have benefitted significantly as a translation studies academic in the U.S. context. I hope to continue my participation in the Association and would look forward to the opportunity to continue making meaningful contributions and serving on the Association's behalf as it works towards increasing the visibility of translation and interpreting studies. I believe I have the background and experience necessary to effectively serve as Vice-President, and it would be a privilege to do so. I would strongly look forward to working with the President, Board, and Members to continue exploring ways to encourage, support, and further the study of translation and interpreting in the U.S. and abroad.
